Managing Paterson's curse to boost pasture production

Source MLA

Seasonal grazing management tactics, tactical applications of herbicides, and use of biological control can control existing infestations or prevent new infestations of Paterson's curse.

Autumn is the best time of year to compete with germinating Paterson's curse, maintain pastures above 1,500kg DM/ha (kilograms of total dry plant matter per hectare), and greater than 80% ground cover to reduce the potential for Paterson's curse germination. Apply fertiliser and possibly lime, according to soil tests, to increase the vigour of desirable perennial pasture species. For more information visit

Weed removers, pasture improvers – effective weed control

Source MLA

Over 2,500 species of weeds are currently impacting on the Australian environment, and the cost of weeds to Australian agriculture now exceeds $4 billion per year. Weed removers and pasture improvers are essential in planning and implementing an effective weed control program.

Key benefits

- Effective long term control of pasture weeds will be obtained from an integrated approach incorporating a range of management tools.

- Implementing the '3Ds' of weed management can increase the competition from desirable pasture species while minimising the proportion of weed species present within the pasture.

www.townandcountrybathurst.com.au/publications

The three main steps of a successful weed management program are:

1. Remove the weed or reduce weed seed set.
2. Restrict weed germination.
3. Encourage competition from desirable species.

These objectives can only be met through developing an integrated approach which takes into account the growth characteristics of both desirable species and weeds.
